“Plotting with an Unreliable Narrator”
November 13th, 2021 at 1 p.m. Eastern time

The next FREE workshop in the We're All in It Together workshop series

If you were able to attend any of my previous workshops in this series, you know we came together as a writing community to cover various nuts and bolts writing topics. I love hanging out with writers! Want to join me?

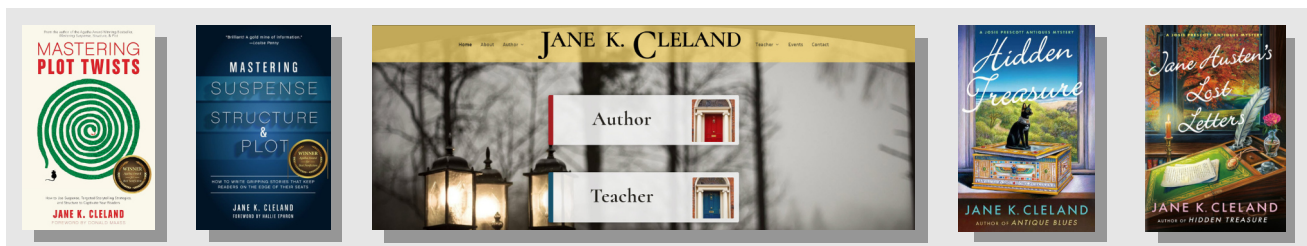

Here are the details about this FREE workshop, “Plotting with an Unreliable Narrator,” on November 13th at 1 p.m. Eastern time. Unreliable narrators add complexity and intrigue to your stories. There’s a risk, though, since unreliable narrators must have a credible reason to be unreliable. You can’t add a character who lies, for example, simply because you want to hide the truth.

This presentation delves into the plotting and character-development complexities associated with the five types of unreliable narrators.

Spend an hour with me while we discuss this crucial concept. There will be time for questions at the end.

If you’re interested, sign up here, and I’ll send you what you need to access the workshop. I’d love it if you could help me spread the word about my free workshops by sharing this flyer via email or on social media. Tell your friends! Invite your writer’s group! How about your book club? Readers welcome, too! Thank you so much!

Until then, I hope you’re finding solace and strength through reading and writing.
